

Traveling to China

Traveling to China is a full-day workshop that provides business professionals with an orientation to the social, professional, and practical day-to-day realities of short-term assignments in China. Special attention is given to building credibility quickly and priorities for your first days and weeks on the ground in China. The program also explores the ways that cultural and value differences can impact the workplace, social environment, and even basic communication. Topics include: Social interaction and communication styles, the importance of “face” and relationship-building in China, the current Chinese political and economic systems, and practical information on business protocols, money, taxis, and gift-giving.

Duration: 4-8 hours

Target Audience:

Executives, Managers, Implementation Teams, Auditors, SMEs, and other short-term travelers to China

Objectives:

- Learn Chinese social and professional protocols that enable the traveler to acclimate and behave appropriately in key situations.
- Identify stages of growth and adjustment in a short-term international experience, including tips for managing the resulting stresses and strains.
- Understand business practices and attitudes that will be both visible and “below the surface” in China, as well as strategies for integrating into this environment.
- Discuss practicalities such as transportation, dining, safety & security, and health issues.
- Identify resources for further self-directed learning and establish an action plan for achieving your highest priorities in China.
- The small-group setting also allows for personal concerns to be addressed in an individual coaching-style environment.

It's a multi-cultural world...
